In React Router v6, the <Outlet> component is used to render child routes and nested route components within a parent route component. It serves as a placeholder for the content of nested routes. When you define a route with child routes, the content of those child routes is rendered within the parent route using the <Outlet> component.